

WALK FIVE:

THE HARBOUR

WALK FIVE: THE HARBOUR

On the 17 May 2017 a group of 12 pupils of varying ages from St Peter's School took time out from their usual studies to explore the area around Folkestone Harbour. This was the fifth and final walk of this series and was aimed at including a record of the opinions of some younger citizens of Folkestone about their town.

St Peter's School sits above, and to the east of, the town overlooking the harbour. The walk, from the school gates to the Urban Room on the Harbour Arm, was an opportunity for the pupils to explore in more detail an area with which they were already very familiar.

After a picnic lunch taken in the Urban Room, the group was invited to record their impressions from the walk and to make recommendations for improvements that should be considered. Their vivid impressions and robust, clear proposals are recorded in the sketches and statements set out in the pages that follow this introduction.

Outer harbour wall The St Peter's pupils suggested that this wall should be opened up for public access in a similar way to the popular Harbour Arm seen in the distance

The Grand Burstin Hotel The pupils suggested many ideas for improving the building such as opening the roof deck for helicopters, repainting, and changing the windows. Some felt demolition was the only option

Glorious mud

Inner harbour at low tide

The River Pent outfall to the sea The St Peters pupils suggested that the waters may be medicinal and could be bottled. Some expressed a strong dislike of seagulls - particularly their noisy and greedy habits
